

You lost the game

When ruins are demolished/razed, do they remain ruins in our memory and writings on them, or do they become another lost building? How long does a ruined structure need to exist in order to be considered a proper ruin?

Are Ruins also Things? Or can they no longer be a Thing when we decide to call them a Ruin?

testing, testing, one two three

Every human being is free to do whatever they want, whenever they want to.

My favorite memory of ours is meeting as competitors in Forensics and high school but quickly becoming friends. The idea that we were supposed to be trying to beat each other in competition was completely shed and we all just enjoyed being together, which I think back fondly on to this day.

I'm afraid I'll never be satisfied with anything I pursue in life. I feel like have too many 'dreams' but not one single one of them is something I would want to dedicate my whole life to. I'm scared of becoming complacent but I also crave stability. I wish I could figure out what I want.

I think all of the art you've been doing is incredibly inspiring. I strive to be more creatively exploratory like you are. I would even love if we could maybe work together on something some day.

If you had to get a limb amputated, for whatever reason, would you be even the least bit curious enough to want to cook it and try tasting it? I mean, it's your limb after all, I think you should be able to do what you want with it. I can't be the only one who thinks this way. Is that weird?

I think one of my motivating factors in pursuing any sort of goal, is the idea that I might make friends. This scares me. Any job I apply for, club I join, or city I move to, I think, subconsciously, what is most important to me is feeling loved, rather than pursuing whatever that particular goal is Love can be a one-way or a two-way street, but it'll still run you over like a five lane interstate.

I hope things are going well at UK. It's been a while since we talked and we are long over due to catch up. I am really proud of you though. You've accomplished so much and it's been a joy to see you grow as an artist. Thanks for always being a good friend. Even when I wasn't much of one at all.

I miss going out to lunch. That was the best part of the week days.

This e-book documents an artwork created on April 16th, 2019 from 11:00 PM to 12:00 AM (US Eastern Time). The self-portrait photograph at the beginning of this document is an hour-long exposure created with a pinhole camera during this time. I stood as still as I could for the duration of this hour.

I created a page on my personal website with a text-entry box where any visitor could anonymously submit a message (or messages) of their choice, up to 300 characters, during the hour-long exposure. These messages were then stored in a database with a timestamp, and also projected onto a screen. This screen was also the light source used in the hour-long exposure, so the light of my self-portrait was made up of the words people chose to submit.

Some of these messages are quite funny, some are sad, most are somewhere in between. I read every message while I tried to remain still for the photograph.
